LIEUT. WIENTGE

Arrives Home from Tampa and Gives An Interesting Account of His Experiences.

HE HAD PLENTY TO EAT

The Boys Left at Tampa Were Bitterly Disappointed, and Yearned for Just One Day on Cuban Soil.

First Lieutenant Fred W. Wientge, of Troop I, "Rough Riders", returned last night over the Santa Fe from Montauk Point in good health and with no complaint to make as to privations except that in company with the rest of his squadron that were left at Tampa, he was very much disappointed at not being able to tread the soil of the Queen of the Antilles even if it was malarious.
He is being welcomed home today by many friends.

Lieutenant Wientge says that the greater part of the scare about the soldiers being starved and misused in the camps was the result of those two pre-eminently yellow papers, the New York World and the New York Journal.
These papers would come into the camps only to be laughed at by the men, and the reporters of the same given great guff. No such talk has been seen in the New York Sun or other reputable periodicals. When the orders came to pack up and go to Savannah to take the transports for Cuba, the men packed up with alacrity, for everybody expected to see service in the field.

Then came the first heart breaker in the shape of an order from Washington that the transports would be taken at Tampa, and the men waited, and unpacked with silent lips but dubious faces.
Finally when the transports did show up, one squadron of the "Rough Riders" and a detail of ten men were given the other troops were left behind to care for the horses and such equipment of the command as could not be taken to the front. The lieutenant says that when the great fleet of transports was loaded with troops, the men were packed in like sardines on the vessels and kept lying in the harbor for nearly a week while the officials at Washington were making up their minds what to do. This treatment of the men was shameful and had a very bad effect upon their morale.

Life in the camp was lively enough, as the men had plenty to do. It was not dusty there to speak of, as the rains kept down the dust, but of course the flies and the mosquitoes were superabundant.
The order of the day was as follows: Reveille at 4 a. m., stable at 4:15, breakfast at 4:30, sick call at 5, first call for drill at 5:45 drill mounted, 6 until 9:30, mess call, noon, school for non-commissioned officers, 1 until 3 p. m., drill for officers under Major Dunn, 3 until 5, dismounted drill in manual of arms, 5 until 6, mess call, 6, roll call and tattoo, 9, taps, 9:30. Notwithstanding the fact that it was a great task to care for 1,000 horses, the men managed to have considerable time to themselves; but when 40 per cent of the squadron were sick the work of the sick developed upon the remaining 60 per cent and they had their hands full.

There was inspection by brigade officers every morning, when the long picket line of horses was expected to be found by the inspecting major in good condition, and the ground entirely free from manure and other stable litter. The drill was not as severe at Camp Tampa as it was at San Antonio where the entire forenoon was taken up in drill under Colonel Roosevelt, as it was necessary to get the horses and some of the men broken in. But the result of this incessant drilling was as fine a body of cavalry as could be found in any country. On Saturdays there was no drill at Camp Tampa, only inspection, and on Sunday there was nothing to do after the horses had been cared for.

The men all had enough to eat, only it was not the delicate grub grub sometimes had been accustomed to. There was no butter or milk for the very good reason that milk could not be kept without ice and ice was a great luxury in that section of the country. Butter could not be kept either, so the men went without those luxuries. However, they had at first, fresh meat three times a week, and afterwards every day there were good potatoes, flour and other staple articles of food. Many of the companies saved their extra flour rations and such other rations as they might save up over the regular issuance, and traded the same off in town with the bakers for baked bread or with other provision dealers for such things as might suit their fancy. Sufficient ice was finally secured to keep the drinking water palatable, and after it was boiled it was kept cool in barrels sunk in the ground and loaded with ice.
The natural water had too much sulphur to drink raw as a regular thing, on account of the effect of the sulphur upon the men's "innards."

Word was frequently heard from the front, and the gallant performance of the two squadrons that went over the sea made the boys in Florida realize bitterly the fact that they were not in it; but they also heard from the front in the remarks from their colonel that the men who remained behind were just as deserving as the men who went to the front, and one did no better than the other. Lieutenant Wientge spoke in the highest terms of the regimental chaplain, Rev. Brown, an Episcopal clergyman who exhibited the greatest bravery under fire at the front, both in showing that he could use a rifle and in looking after the wounded.

The squadron, horses and all went north by a special train, the cars going clear through to Montauk Point. At Jersey City, the local armory was thrown open to the soldiers, and the horses were housed in the stock yards at 40 cents per day per head for four days. But the stock company neglected the animals so that Lieutenant Wientge hardly knew his horses when he came to look for them. The Jersey City people were hospitality itself, and the lieutenant once found himself called to dinner in nine different directions. Then the cars were ferried on the big freight transfer boats to south Brooklyn and switched off onto the lines of the Long Island road whence to the Point it was a short run.

Montauk Point, the lieutenant says, proved a lovely place to stay, and the sick men picked right up under the change of climate. The grass was regular range feed, and their fresh water lakes were immense. The boys in fact lived in clover at Montauk, and had every thing their hearts might wish for, with milk and butter galore; in fact, many would sour for want of some one to drink it. No, there is no kicking coming on account of the treatment at Mon-tauk.

The lieutenant received his first military instruction in Germany, at a military school, and in this country was a non-commissioned officer in the 6th artillery and was latter in the 1st New Jersey infantry. He is well posted in tactics, and it is said by the men that he was of material assistance to his superior officers in the way of giving valuable information on tactics more than once.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL.

Lines written by a former resident of Santa Fe who longs to return:
I wish I were near Santa Fe A strolling thrush the wood.
A blue-eyed maid aside of me—I'd please her, if I could.
For her I'd pluck some flowers rare, And quarts that's streaked with gold—I'd please her, if I could.
In weather warm or cold.
And if this life I'd journey through,
On plain or in the wood, Beside the girl with eyes of blue,
I'd please her, if I could.

Yesterday afternoon, Miss Nellie P.
Crane entertained in honor of Mrs. W.
H. Whitman, and the occasion proved one of the most enjoyable of the year.
The amusement furnished the guests was modeling. Each one was furnished with a celluloid plaque and a piece of putty and instructed to model a burro.
The Rocky mountain canary is not a beautiful bird at its best, but it is as well that no burros were present to criticize the ladies' work. The shrieks of laughter which greeted the completed efforts were evidence of the success of each plaque as it was turned over to the judges. After much discussion of the different points of excellence of each piece the prizes were awarded: First to Mrs. Van Schick; second to Miss Nellie Crane; and third to Mrs. M. S. Simmons. The refreshments served were particularly dainty, and after the severe mental efforts required to remember the exact appearance of a burro, were highly enjoyed. The rooms in which the guests assembled were profusely and tastefully decorated with flowers in yellow and white. Among those present were: Mesdames Whitman, M. A. Ote-
